Soviet Official Arrives To Resume China Talks

Israelis Destroy Launcher, Weigh Response to Ambush

JERUSALEM — Israeli fighters destroyed a launch vehicle for anti-aircraft missiles in a hilly, forested area east of Beirut Monday, the military command an-

The air strike was accomplished by Israeli Air Force planes under standing orders to hit such launchers whenever they are detected, the army radio said. This one, a Soviet-made tracked vehicle of the SAtype, was located about six miles (9.5 kilometers) east of Bhamdoun. Officials said it might have been brought into the area by Libyans to provide defenses for the Palestine Liberation Organization.

The strike came as the cabinet in Jerusalem was concluding an emergency session called to discuss military options after an ambush of a busiond of Israeli soldiers on the Beirut-Damascus highway Sunday. Six soldiers were killed and 22 wounded. Speculation mounted that Israel would retaliate. Government officials were quoted by army radio as saying that the strike on the missile launcher was not considered a reprisal for the ambush, raising the possibility of some further attack, possibly against PLO positions in northern Lebanon near Tripoli. Gemayel Bids Wazzan Keep Lebanon Post

By James F. Clarity

New York Times Service
BEIRUT — In a move designed to satisfy Lebanon's mutually mis-trustful Moslem and Christian leaders, President Amin Gemayel named Shafiq al-Wazzan on Monday to stay on as prime minister and form a new government.

The president, a Maronite Christian, had to choose a Sunni Moslem as prime minister under unwritten but rigid Lebanese tradition. But the president's first choice was not necessarily Mr. Wazzan, according to knowledgeable Lebanese political analysts. Mr. Gemayel, the analysts said, agree serious consideration to name gave serious consideration to nam-ing Major General Ahmed el-Hajj, a Moslem career officer who had headed the army's special security force for the last two years.

Mr. Gemayel was said to have favored General Hajj because he had no ties, nor obligations, to any of the Moslem political parties or factions in the country. The president also felt that the general was the best man to strengthen the perennially weak Lebanese Army, now trying to assume control of the country after eight years of civwar and invasions by Syrian and Israeli armies. The general was also considered by the president to be best able to handle one of the nation's most delicate and danger-ous problems: disarming the Christian Phalangist militia, which was headed by the president's brother, Bashir, until, as president-elect, he was assassinated on Sept.

The president chose Mr. Wazzan at the urging, if not the insistence of Saeb Salam, the 77-yearold former prime minister who is probably the most influential Moslem leader in Lebanon. The new president repeatedly offered to make Mr. Salam prime minister for the fifth time, but the aging leader refused. "I always felt I could serve better from outside the government," Mr. Salam said in a recent interview. So he pressed the new president forts by the United States to nego- to appoint Mr. Wazzan, who had been prime minister for the last two years. Mr. Wazzan had resigned, as a matter of formality, when Mr. Gemayel was elected to replace his dead brother and took office on Sept 23. Mr. Wazzan also had the support of the Moslem who was the chief arranger of the evacuation.

Mr. Wazzan also won the respect and confidence of the Chris-tian Phalangists, who wanted the PLO to leave Beirut. In an interview Monday at his home in the Basta section of West Beirut, Mr. Wazzan said, in effect, that the Phalangist militia would be disarmed, but he did not say how or

"We are here to re-establish all sovereignty, and above all over Lebanese territory," he said, in French. "Certainly there will be only the legal government forces. So the militias must disappear, one way or the other." The prime minister said he would consult with members of parliament in the next two days on appointments to his cabinet. This is traditionally a delicate matter of satisfying the desire for power and influence of the several political, ethnic and religious groups in the country. While the Maronite Christians by tradition control the presidency, they comprise proba-bly less than a third of the national population of three million. The Sunni Moslems, while they control the job of prime minister, number perhaps 500,000. Woman Challenges a Race Law: 'Look at Me, I'm White'

Despite Fair Skin, She Is Labeled 'Colored' Under Louisiana Statute Based on Genealogy

By Gregory Jaynes
New York Times Service

NEW ORLEANS - A Louisiana woman who the state contends is black has gone to court to have herself declared white, and that is but the short of it.

Her story, a story as old as the country, has elements of anthropology and sociology special to this region, and its message, here in 1982 America, is that it is still far better to be white than black. Some New Orleans blacks are cheering

Her name is Susie Guillory Phipps. She is a black-haired woman of 48 with big dark eyes, and she says she was flab-bergasted and sickened to learn when she applied for a birth certificate five years ago that the state's Bureau of Vital Statistics had her down as "colored."

"I'm not light," she said, pointing to her face. "I'm

So say thousands of Louisianians with Negroes in their ancestry, but thousands of others, blue-eyed and fair, consider themselves black. In Mrs. Phipps's case, the state has traced her genealogy back 222 years, to a black slave named Margarita, Mrs. Phipps's great-great-great-great-grand-

Her great-great-great-great-grandfather was a white planter named John Gregoire Guillory. Louisiana law since 1970 has held that if a person has 1/32d "Negro blood," the person is black. Before 1970 "a trace" of Negro ancestry made a person black in the eyes of the state.

The 1970 law is the only one in the country that gives any equation for determining a person's race. Elsewhere, race is simply a matter of what the parents tell the authorities to record on the birth certificate, with no questions asked

The chief advocate of the Louisiana law at the time it was passed, a New Orleans lawyer who asked not to have his name published, said he was then representing a white family whose child was given a black birth certificate because, when the documents came through the state office, someone saw the name and it alerted him to the fact that the family had a trace of Negro blood."

The lawyer traced the family genealogy and found that the child might be "1/256th Negro." He said he had gone to the Louisiana Legislature with his bill, and "I got into a hassle with some of them, and so they started off at 1/128th, and just to have some bargaining power I started off with an octaroon, or an eighth. We finally struck the bargain at 1/32d, and it sailed through. There was no de-

"What I was trying to do was help a white person get a white birth certificate. Whatever you feel on the race question, it's a fact that white people don't want to be known as colored, and maybe colored people don't want to be known Mrs. Phipps, who lives in Sulphur, Louisiana, with her husband, Andy, a white, wealthy seafood wholesaler, has spent $20,000 in legal fees trying to get the law declared unconstitutional and herself declared white. A decision is pending in Otleans Parish Civil District Court, where hearings on the matter were held last month.

The state has spent $5,000 hiring a genealogical researcher and tracking Mrs. Phipps's heritage to prove that she is black. Jack Westholz is the attorney for the state. Though he says he does not like the law at all, he argues that Mrs.

Phipps has known for years that she is "colored." "This is where Susie's people are from," said Mr. Westholz, tracing a finger on a map across tiny communities called Mowata, Frey and Iota along Bayou Mallet in southwest Louisiana. "Now you turn off Highway 13 here at Mowata, and right by this railroad track lives a man remed Deigle."

named Daigle."

"He wouldn't give me a deposition, but he'll tell you he remembers that little black-eyed Susie," Mr. Westholz continued. "He'll tell you how she nearly caused a race not in 1969 when she planted her parents in the white section of the cemetery. They died two months apart."

Mr. Daigle was not home when a reporter visited recent-

"My problem," Mr. Westholz said, "is not whether she's black or white. My problem is how to deal with a statute that's very burdensome. I'm looking for guidelines. If she loses and I receive no guidelines, then I've lost." He added that the legislature was not likely to repeal the law because the issue was too "hot."

Munro Edmonson, a professor of anthropology at Tulane University, testified on Mrs. Phipps's behalf, making the points that there is no such thing as a pure race and that there is no way to determine what percentage of Negro (Continued on Page 2, Col. 3)

Spain Leaders Accused Of Laxity on Military

By Brian Mooney

MADRID — Spanish opposition politicians and sections of the press accused the government Monday of laxity toward the military amid evidence linking colonels who allegedly plotted a coup this month with imprisoned lead-ers of last year's unsuccessful at-The government said that the latest plot, intended to thwart a likely Socialist victory in general elections Oct. 28, was foiled during the weekend with the arrest of Colonels Luis Muñoz Gutierrez and Jesus Crespo Cuspinera and his brother, Lieutenant-Colonel José Crespo Cuspinera.

Their alleged plan involved seizure of key government and mil-itary installations, communication centers and the royal palace in Madrid, and the isolation of the capital prior to a general uprising, ac-cording to sources working on the investigation.

The colonels were caught by the army's intelligence command after one colonel spent four hours visiting Lieutenant-General Jaime Milans del Bosch, who is serving a 30year prison sentence for his part in masterminding the unsuccessful coup of February 1981.

The government said Sunday night that the situation was entireunder control and claimed that the vast majority of the armed forces remained loyal to the king and constitution. But politicians and newspaper was based on suppression of the democratic freedoms won since the death of Franco in 1975 and return to a rightist dictatorship, the sources said. The sources said the colonels had evidently learned the lesson of the fiasco of February 1981, when a spectacular raid on the Cortes failed to result in a general rising. The failure was largely due to the intervention of King Juan Carlos, who was able to contact regional military commanders on a special line and secure their loyalty. Iranian Plane Is Hijacked To Emirates

The colonels' political program

United Press International SHARJAH, United Arab Emirates — Four hijackers de-manding political asylum in the United States seized an Iranian military transport plane with 79 all passengers and forced the aircraft to fly to an unknown destination Monday, the police said.

At one point after the passengers had been released in the Unit-ed Arab Emirates, the pilot asked permission to fly over Lebanon. But Lebanese officials refused. The C-130 Hercules transport was seized Sunday on what apparently was a domestic flight and was forced to fly from Iranian air space across the Gulf to Dubai International Airport in the United Arab Emirates. The origin of the flight was not immediately known. The Emirates news agency, WAM, said the hijackers — three men and a woman — released all the passengers, including 26 chil-dren and 19 women, at Dubai. Demands Refused

But when authorities refused to negotiate the demands of the hijackers for political asylum in the United States, the plane flew to nearby Shariah Airport, about 20 miles (32 kilometers) north of Dubai, the police said. At Sharjah, the hijackers asked for asylum in the Emirates, but a negotiating team rejected that re-quest, WAM said, quoting official sources. However, the negotiators allowed the plane to be refueled and it took off a short time later. The transport plane apparently had been carrying Iranian officers, soldiers and their families. Emirates authorities were trying to arrange a return flight to Iran for death, the loss of public rights for-ever and confiscation of all his property. The move to eliminate Solidarity has been signaled by a drumbeat of attacks on the old Solidarity leadership in the controlled press. coupled with calls for what is almost invariably described as a "revival" of union activity.

The placing of the potentially controversial trade union bill on the agenda for the next meeting of the Seim on Friday and Saturday. was front-page news in the War-saw dailies Monday. The stance of the military gov-

the people.
"If the bill is passed with its possible consequences, major distur-bances can be expected," he said.

Intellectuals Blamed

Following widespread demonstrations on Aug. 31 that led to clashes with the police in a number of industrial centers, the authori-ties abandoned talk of establishing a "dialogue" with Solidarity and launched a crackdown on dissent. The demonstrations were called by underground Solidarity leaders.
Authorities sought to put the blame for the troubles on the dissident intellectuals who served as advisers in the early stages of Soli-

The line taken in a barrage of editorials was that both the intellectuals, who were said to have "hijacked" a legitimate workers movement, and the Solidarity leadership were "enemies of socialism," and that any agreements, such as those signed at the Gdansk shipyards two years ago, had been made with the workers themselves, not with any organization.

Officials See Long Stay And More Casualties For Marines in Beirut

By Richard M. Weintraub

Washington Past Service
WASHINGTON — The 1,200 U.S. marines in Lebanon could remain there for a minimum of four to six months, according to gov-ernment officials. They say Ameri-cans should be braced for further casualties like the death of one marine and wounding of three last week during mine-clearing opera-

President Ronald Reagan has said the marines must stay as part of a multinational force until reestablishment of a Lebanese government with real authority and removal of Israeli and Syrian troops from the country. By all assessments, these are the prerequi-sites for pushing the president's stalled Middle East peace initiative beyond the talking stage.

Mr. Reagan and other U.S. officials have stressed repeatedly that the marines' mission is meant to be a short one. They used phrases such as "of limited duration" and "a few weeks."

Behind the scenes, however, officials sneak about a minimum stav of four to six months — time for the Lebanese government and army to re-establish authority in Beirut and then for that authority to spread in stages into areas vacated by withdrawing Israelis and Syrians. As more than one policymaker noted. little seems to go as scheduled in Lebanon.

The scenario leading to with-drawal, as charted by administration officials and longtime observ-ers of U.S. Middle East policy, is not particularly complicated on Both Syria and Israel have said that they do not want to stay in Lebanon, but neither is likely to withdraw until it believes its security needs are met. Both have legitimate security concerns — Israel about its northern border and Syria about the fact that Israeli troops are poised along two Syrian

Syria has long felt that Lebanon is within its sphere of interest, and Beirut has been the traditional port of entry for minimize such Syrian influence by joining forces with the Lebanese Christians and, more recently, by seeking a formal treaty guarantee.

The key to possible success, in this analysis, is establishment of a truly independent Lebanese government. Syria, weakened after a military drubbing by the Israelis and by continuing internal dissent, is viewed as vulnerable to pressure for a pullout.

But this observer said that because of the massacres last month in two Beirut Palestinian refugee camps, "there may well be less support for a direct or indirect presence." Lebanon's new president, Amin Gemayel, has not ruled out a treaty with Israel but says parliament must decide the issue.

The tactical arrangement that Morris Draper, another U.S. special envoy, is believed to be seeking is a phased withdrawal under which Lebanese Army units would move into areas vacated by Israelis, Syrians and Palestinia

This brings the issue back to the first question: establishment of control by the Lebanese government, essentially an element of trust in a society sharply divided along religious lines and well aware of past atrocities.

Positive Signs

U.S. policy-makers have viewed as positive signs President Gemay-el's visit to predominantly Moslem West Beirut last Thursday as a unibeen blaming Israel, not the Christian militia close to Mr. Gemayel, for the Palestinian massacre, one U.S. analyst noted. The central problem is trying to assert central government con-trol over the fringe elements. Somehow, these elements will have to be purged or suppressed," another observer said.

Accompanied by military experts, Mr. Draper is said to be surveying the needs of the Lebanese Army and prospects for its gradual deployment. This process is ex-pected to be followed by an aid ckage for the Lebanese military.

There appears to be greater optimism on the army's future than on the continued tacit agreement of Lebanon's political leaders to allow emergence of a strong central

Tories Gaining In Popularity, U.K. Poll Says

The Associated Press LONDON - After 31/2 years in power, Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher and her Conservative Party are more popular with electors than they were 12 months ago, a Gallim Poll reported Monday.

The poll was published in the conservative Daily Telegraph on the eve of the party's annual conference, which opens Tues-day in Brighton. Gallup said its findings were based on questioning of 955 electors in more than 100 of the country's 635 electoral districts from Sept. 22 to 27.

Asked if their opinion of the ruling party had risen or declin-ed since the May 1979 election, 18 percent said it had gone up compared with 5 percent a year ago, 48 percent said it had gone down against 58 percent, 32 percent said it was the same against 35 percent and 2 per-cent were "don't knows," the same as last year's poll.

Saudis Warn Iran to End Iraq War

LONDON — Saudi Arabia warned Iran's revolutionary Moslem leaders Monday that they face a "no holds barred" war with all Arab states unless they accept mediation to end the war with Iraq.

The threat, made in a state radio broadcast, followed Sudan's an-

Iran's revolutionary leader, Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, said Sunday that Iran would not accept any peace initiative that did not "guarantee the punishment of the aggressor and payment of war reparations to Iran."

Iran claimed its forces repulsed two Iraqi counteroffensives early Monday in the Sumar region, about 60 miles (% kilometers) northeast of Baghdad. Iran claimed it captured the Sumar area in an offensive Fri-

Reagan Officials, Catholic Bishops Quietly Debating Nuclear Policy

By Richard Halloran New York Times Service

WASHINGTON — Since the spring, senior officials in the Reagan administration and the nation's Roman Catholic bishops have been quietly debating the emotional and volatile issue of nuclear war.

Some of the debate, invariably waged in courteous tones, has gone on behind the scenes in impubli-cized meetings between delega-tions from the National Conference of Catholic Bishops and Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger or Eugene V. Rostow, director of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, or Law-rence S. Eagleberger, the undersec-

In particular, President Ronald Reagan's national security adviser, William P. Clark, and Mr. Weinberger have reiterated the administration's insistence that the United States retain the right to fire nuclear weapons first, if necessary. The bishops' letter urges the adminis-tration to renounce that policy.

In the first draft of that pastoral letter, the bishops said: "We have profound doubts about whether the use or threatened use of nuclear weapons can be truly reconciled with traditional principles of selfdefense and just war.

"Christians cannot long live by the sign of the mastroom cloud," it asserted. In response, Mr. Clark wrote a letter to Clare Boothe Luce, a prominent Catholic, to pass along to the bishops.

"I am troubled about what appears to be a fundamental mismiderstanding in the letter concerning existing United States nuclear deterrence policy," he wrote.

Mr. Clark, who made his letter available on request, also asserted that the pastoral letter ignored "the far-reaching efforts by the United States to bring the world closer to peace" through Mr. Reagan's proposals for arms reduction. Mr. Weinberger wrote directly to the bishops and also made his letter available. It said that, given the horrible consequences of muclear war, "the burden of proof must fall upon those who would depart from the sound policies of deterrence which have kept the peace for so long."

"I find most troubling the draft litically acceptable exchange in the letter's implication that the policy making of national policy, may of deterrence itself should be forsoon become public. The bishops saken if complete nuclear disarma-

A spokesman for Archbishop Joseph L. Bernardin of Chicago, chairman of the committee that drafted the pastoral letter, said that altogether the committee had received 700 pages of comments from a broad spectrum of people He said all opinions had been con-sidered but declined to say what influence Mr. Clark or Mr. Weinberger had had on the committee.

In his letter, Mr. Weinberger reflected the administration's concern over the effect of the pastoral letter, saying that it was "certain to influence thinking in the United States and around the world." The revised version of the letter was expected to say that nuclear

Senior Officials in U.S. Remain Unconvinced Russia Has Given Up on Reagan Government

By Michael Getler

Washington Post Service
WASHINGTON — Despite severe strains between Washington and the Kremlin, senior U.S. officials do not believe, as some Soviet spokesmen have suggested, that Moscow has given up on the Reagan administration.

Although these officials acknowledge that there is no sign of progress in any of the disputes between the superpowers over Poland, Afghanistan, trade and other issues, they believe that the Russians remain serious in their bilateral discussions and "have not drawn the conclusion that they can't talk to this administration," as one official put it.

The idea that Moscow has little choice but to await the passing of a belligerently anti-Soviet administration is one with potentially important impact among critics of U.S. policy, especially in Western Emope. It is put forward by such Soviet spokesmen as Georgi A. Ar-batov, head of the Institute of U.S. and Canadian Studies of the Soviet Academy of Sciences, whose views are given considerable exposure

The first meeting at the United Nations last week between Andrei Gromyko, the Soviet foreign minister, and George P. Shultz, the U.S. secretary of state, was "a very serious conversation, not dealing with motivations or intentions but with real issues," the official em-phasized. The two were to-meet again Monday in New York.

Previous meetings between Mr. Gromyko and the former secretary of state, Alexander M. Haig Jr., were also serious, the official said, "which belies the propaganda line being taken by Arbatov."

"We know so little about what the top Soviet leadership really thinks," the official said. "What they say they think, out of the mouths of the propagandists, I don't believe most of the time because they don't behave that way. When an Arbatov says 'we've given up' and then Gromyko sits down with us and has a serious conversation, we don't listen too much to Mr. Arbatov."

Similarly, he said, while there has been no breakthrough in nuclear arms talks in Geneva, the

Despite problems of poor coor-dination between construction crews, however, the Communis Party newspaper said "the Soviet people are sare the gas supplies will begin flowing in 1984, in ac-cordance with agreements." Pravda indicated the biggest problem centered on the 40 compressor stations necessary to build gas pressure in the pipes.

The United States has opposed Western Europe's participation in the pipeline project, which features a long-term trade of Western construction experise and financial support for Soviet raw materials.

Engene V. Rostow, director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, has described Mr. Reagan's proposal for the start of the talks in June as a two-stage plan that, in the first stage, would reduce ballistic missiles to equal levels at least one-third below the current numbers.

In the second stage, Mr. Rostow said, equal ceilings would be sought on "other elements of United States and Soviet strategic forces."

But Mr. Karpov reterated Monday the Soviet

NEC in Scotland Announcing our first shipment of 64K RAM chips.

October 1, 1982, marked the first shipment of 64K RAM chips from our new NEC production facility in Livingston, Scotland.

The 64K RAM incorporates the very latest microelectronics technology—the kind that is revolutionizing the scope of product development everywhere. No larger than a thumbnail, this advanced VLSI is the secret behind electronics products of far greater sophistication and power.

For their part, the people of Livingston and nearby Edinburgh provided all the skill and ingenuity that were required—an admirable feat in light of the advanced technology involved.

So what looks like a tiny chip is actually much more. A combination of leading-edge technology and local skill, our first Scottish-made chips are also a source of considerable pride.

Fighting Export Subsidies

Practically everyone agrees that subsidizing exports with low-cost government loans is a bad idea. Cheap credit, like any form of export subsidy, is just another "beggar-thy-neighbor" policy, creating jobs in one country at the expense of jobs in another. What everyone does not agree about, though, is how to get rid of it.

Budget Director David Stockman leads the fight to cut funding for America's Export-Import Bank, the agency that now offers be-low-market interest loans to foreign buyers of American products. Other countries, Mr. Stockman presumes, could then be persuaded to follow the example.

There is a more likely route to success: convince U.S. trade rivals that America is prepared to match (and thereby neutralize) their export credit subsidies.

Mr. Stockman has made the Export-Import Bank a priority target since taking office. In 1981 he asked Congress to trim the bank's lending by one-third, to $3.7 billion. He did not get all that he wanted: Congress authorized $4.4 billion. But he did manage to provide a subappoint an ally, William Draper, as president of the bank. Mr. Draper has used his discretionary anthority to tighten lending terms. And the administration is once again asking for cuts in the bank's budget.

The administration's opposition to Export-Import lending is partly based on principle. The president's economic advisers favor open being undermined by export subsidies from the industrialized countries. But the policy also serves more pragmatic purposes. Virtually all Export-Import loans go toward sales by a few very large corporations — Boeing, Westinghouse, General Electric and McDonnell Douglas, for example. By opposing Ex-Im programs the president can argue that he wants to cut government aid to the rich and powerful as well as the poor.

The ploy is understandable, but it only distracts from the tactical question of how best to eliminate all export subsidies. The admin-istration is now asking the Europeans to end all cheap financing on commercial aircraft, save those sold to very poor countries. And it will no doubt ask for similar reforms from all industrial exporters when the industrialized Western nations meet next year to discuss export credit policies.

The Europeans, Canadians and Japanese might be persuaded by sweet reason. But the long, sorry history of such negotiations suggests otherwise, especially during recession. The more practical approach is to prove U.S. determination to slug it out in the market-place unless the other nations eliminate subsidies to buyers who can afford to pay. And the first step along that route is for Congress to support Export-Import Bank lending at pre-Reagan levels.

On Senatorial Courtesy

tesy, that the Senate will not confirm a nominee from any state who is personally obnoxious to one of the senators from that state. It is an ancient tradition, justified on the ground that no one who is foolish enough to initate a senator from his state is wise enough to hold an office important enough to require Senate confirmation.

Circular at best, this logic can be carried to truly silly extreme Take the case of Admiral Elmo Zumwalt, the former chief of naval operations, who has been nominated by President Ronald Reagan and confirmed by the Senate as an appointee to the General Advisory Committee of the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency.

The nomination is being sent back to the Senate by the administration at the behest of Senators Harry Byrd Jr. and John Warner of Virginia. The admiral is from Virginia. No one disputes that Admiral Zumwalt is well-qualified for the position: He has plenty of relevant experience and, though a Demo-crat, he endorsed President Reagan in 1980. But Admiral Zumwalt's home-state senators did not notice his nomination when it was approved manimonsly in committee and on the floor (they complain that the White House failed to notify them), and now they want a chance to consider whether they will invoke senatorial courtesy. One can understand their irritation. Admiral Zumwalt was the Democratic candidate against Mr. Byrd in the 1976 election, and no one likes opposition. The fact that the sena-tor took little notice of the admiral in his campaign, and the large margin of his victory, suggest, however, that any wounds have led. At least eight senators have supported the nominations of former opponents for various positions, and we would think Senator Byrd, after examining the merits, would want to make a similar decision.

As for Senator Warner, he was Navy secretary when Admiral Zumwalt was chief of naval operations; they disagreed on things then, later and now. Admiral Zunnwalt, in his book, "On Watch," called Mr. Warner a "dilettante" who suffered from a "chronic inability to make decisions."

Time to Push Reagan's Peace Plan

BOSTON — It is time to return to the agenda of peace in the Middle East. And the item at the top remains President Ronald Reagan's ini-

Talk of peace may seem incongruous after these last days. But the need for the Reagan plan, its urgency, is even clearer now. It offers all parties a way out of the cycle of fear and violence. And the fact is that among all parties there are signs of interest. To the Palestinians, the Reagan plan offers acceptance of political identity and a chance for genuine self-rule in the West Bank and Gaza, in association with Jordan. And reports from the West Bank say that leaders there see it as the one realistic hope of stopping Israel's creeping an-nexation of those territories.

Cautious Steps

To leaders of the moderate Arab states, the Reagan plan offers a way out of a looming political threat: the appeal of radicalism, fed by seeming American impotence in the face of Israeli expansionism. And these leaders, even the cautious King Hussein, have taken steps, at least gingerly,

To Israel, the Reagan plan offers the hope of normal life; an end to the unceasing strain of living as in an armed camp. And despite the angry rejectionism of Menachem Begin and Ariel Sharon, there is ample evidence By Anthony Lewis that many Israelis would like to see egotiations on the initiative.

The political struggle over the Reagan plan is going to be played out largely in Israel. For the people of that intensely political society, it really poses a choice between two alternative visions of their future.

One is the Begin-Sharon vision; annexing the West Bank and Gaza into 2 Greater Israel. That would mean taking 1.2 million more Palestinians into a Jewish state. It would prevent development of friendly relations with Egypt and insure continuing hostility from the rest of the Arab world. It would require a permanently militarized Israel.

The other is the Reagan vision: a transition through autonomy in the West Bank to a territorial settlement with Jordan and the Palestinians. That would open the way to friendly relations on Israel's eastern border, its longest and most important. It would go far toward making Israel, in President Sadat's phrase, welcome in the Middle East.

The most significant aspect of the future as envisioned by Begin and Sharon is the way Israelis would have to treat Palestinians - and what they would thereby do to themselves. That psychological process has already begun in the West Bank.

The New York Times published two lengthy studies of conditions in the West Bank by its correspondent in Israel, David Shipler. There was a telling interview with the secretary of one Jewish settlement in the territory,

Era Rapaport, who went to Israel from Brooklyn 11 years ago. What would happen to the Palestinians, Mr. Rapaport was asked, if Israel annexed the West Bank? His answer was this: They can stay, but with the understanding that I cannot allow them voting power and I cannot allow them to be in my army. Palestine is on the other side of the Jordan River. They can go there. Therefore, I think that the direction should be in trying to offer a population exchange."

A Deliberate Choice

In other words, Israel could not re-main a Jewish state if it annexed the territories and gave their inhabitants the rights of citizens. They would have to be treated as second-class people, like blacks in South Africa. Except that the ruling whites in South Africa inherit a history that has put them in this situation, while Israel would be making a deliberate choice to treat a large indigenous population as helots.

The alternative would be to force the Palestinians out, and that is not so farfetched. Mr. Sharon has made very clear, more than once in a career marked by brutal actions, that he would like the Palestinians not to be "exchanged" but to be frightened out of the occupied territories.

And a highly regarded correspond-ent of the Israeli newspaper Ha'aretz reported last week that Phalangists anned the Beirut massacre "with the objective of causing a mass flight of Palestinians.

The Reagan vision of Israel's future has its uncertainties and dangers, too, on the score of security.

The president has been reassuringly firm about the American commitment. The question is what Arab leaders will do. If King Hussein would say forthrightly that he is pre-pared to live with Israel — as Americans long have been pressing him to do - and to join negotiations on the Reagan plan, he would make an imnense difference to Israelis' sense of era in Bonn politics. But it is not the end of the West Germany that the world has come to know. It is a severe tremor — not an earthquake.

Herr Schmidt, the Social Democrat, and his successor as chancellor, Herr Helmut Kohl, the Christian Democrat, have more in common with each other than either does with the more dogmatic elements in his party. What Herr Kohl has yet to prove is that he possesses the sheer personal authority re-

His record to date is better than some German commentators are ready to admit. In the struggle for power during the past few years he has bested both the ever-ambitious Herr Strauss and some other right-wingers.

The unpredictable factor is the emergence of the so-called Greens. They might well replace the Free Democrats as the group holding the balance of power in Bonn. Should that happen, many Social Democrats might be tempted to team up with the Greens. If that is the direction in which the party goes, it will risk severe tension within its own ranks and in the longer run it could also damage the underlying political and social consensus

A Double Standard

When Arab terrorists commit atrocities, sdeeds are almost taken for granted. But when the Israelis are implicated in acts of wanton brutality, as they were in West Beirut last month, the world is outraged.

Thus a double standard is being applied to Israel — much to the consternation of Prime Minister Begin and his supporters, who assert

As I see it, however, the double standard is tribute to Israel. For the expectation that the Israelis ought to behave differently from their enemies underlines the perception of the Jewish state as a unique phenomenon.

Ostracized and persecuted throughout history, the Jews retained their identity for 2,000 years because of their faith in their own morsuperiority.

From the start, therefore, Israel was saddled with the awesome responsibility of operating on a loftier ethical plane than its Arab adversaries. Fulfilling that responsibility has not been easy.

The Cuban Obstacle

Of all the obstacles to a settlement in and around Namibia, the presence of tens of thousands of Cuban troops in Angola, to the north of the disputed territory, has always seemed the most intractable, once the South Africans had the inspiration to raise it and the Reagan administration, predictably, backed them in so doing. Pretoria's position is that there can be no question of a South African withdrawal from Namibia until the Cubans withdraw from Angola.

Now the French appear to be ready to take a hand in the matter. They have come up with the excellent suggestion that French troops could move into Angola as an advance and token replacement for the Cubans if the latter were asked by Luanda to withdraw.

1932: The Threat to the Dollar

DES MOINES, lowa — In one of the more dramatic speeches of his career, President Hoover swept aside the curtain of secrecy that guarded anxious White House conferences last spring and summer and revealed the silent battle waged by administration forces to save the American dollar, which he said was once on the verge of collapse. With startling and human frankness, rarely found in a political speech, the president said that at one time in the uphill fight, the dollar was but two weeks away from disaster. The secretary of the Treasury had informed him that unless gold withdrawals were halted, the nation would be forced off the gold standard within 14 days, the chief executive added.

There have often been hot political arguments, but what is going on among Israelis today is "totally different," he said in an interview. "When did we He is a popular man, because of his warmth, because of his culture, because he is one of the few know? Could we have stopped it? It touches our essence, our soul," self with the victims." Then, referring to Beirut, he lowered his soft voice to an awed whisper and continued, "It was a pogrom."

Navon on the Massacre in Beirut: 'This Is Not Us'

"We want to cleanse our conscience," the president said. "Let the guilty pay, whoever. We must condemn the perpetrators and we know who they are, the Phalangists. But are we in the picture or not? We believe that God created man in his own image, in the sanctity of life. He who saves one soul is as if he saves all the world, and he who kills one soul is as if he kills all the world.

"Even the Orthodox here are beginning to say we should give back the [occupied] territories if it means saving souls, that comes first. We've been victims for so long, we identify with victims. It's impossible to bear. We have an obligation to our selves and the part of the civilized world to which we want to belong.

"This is not us," he said gravely. President Navon declines to take sides in the argument raging since the state was founded about whether it should be considered just another land or something special, answering: "Both. We want to be a normal country but we don't want to be just like any other people. We deserve to be judged differently. There is a moral basis for the country. Every one of us feels both needs."

Sephardim who have reached high office, perhaps because he is above the political dogfight. Like most Israelis, he will wait now in anguish and anxiety for the record to be established. He inspires confidence that the country will not allow itself to be fooled or frightened into hiding shame.

It is true, as he points out, that Christians and Moslems in the Arab world have a long tradition of blood feuds that lead to repeated massacres. They have a custom of collective, clan responsibility that visits vengeance on a group without dis-tinction between innocent and guilty individuals. But that is not the standard Israel set for itself.

It is true, as some point out and as Mr. Navon refrains from mentioning, that Israel is blamed harshly for acts merely deplored when others commit them. There has been an outpouring of attacks on Israel since the invasion of Lebanon that is of a different order from the condemnation heaped on other countries when they conquer and kill.

The words "Nazi-style" and "genocide" and "holocaust" have been flung about as though the Auschwitzes were incidents in combat. A French Jewish leader suggested on Paris television that his compatriots sounded almost grateful to be denouncing Jews without restraint.

France had the worst record of the German-wcupied countries in World War II in delivering its Jewish citizens to the Nazis.

Beirut, the Frenchman said, seemed to ease the vestiges of bad conscience. Mr. Begin told his cabinet that "Goyim kill goyim, and they immediately come to hang the Jews."
He has a point, but it is not an explanation nor any kind of exoneration for Israelis, even less for the rest of the world. Now Israel is confronting its belief in itself. It will be its own judge. It is under moral siege from within. It needs a chance to perform the somber task in dignity. A man like President Navon gives assurance that Israel is still able and willing to do so.

Reagan's Alienation From Europeans Leaves NATO Drifting

WASHINGTON — Like a martion between Western Europe and the United States is proceeding apace, accompanied by the usual symptoms of mutual recrimination, noncommunication and psychological withdrawal. Unless the trend is arrested, the next step will be separation (a withdrawal of U.S. forces?) followed by divorce.

For this state of affairs, the Reagan administration is largely responsible. At a critical period in the economic life of Western Europe, with severe strains on the international monetary system, and with unemployment at unprecedented levels - 13 percent in Britain and 9 percent in West Germany — the Reagan administration's policy of tight money and disguised -- Stanley Karnow, protectionism has been a heavy drag on the economies of its allies.

The administration's unsuccessful attempt to stop shipment of equip-ment for the Soviet gas pipeline has embittered relations with Europe and impaired future attempts to develop a unified policy on export credits applicable to trade with the Soviet Union. President Ronald Reagan's apparent incapacity to discuss substance on equal terms with European counterparts has eliminated the crucial personal .channel through which Dwight D. Eisenhower, John F. Kennedy and Richard M. Nixon were able to resolve differences before they escalated to public confrontation. For the first time since the Calvin Coolidge administration in the 1920s. the political leadership of the United States is provincial in background and isolationist in spirit. In contrast to his predecessors, Mr. Reagan has neither the experience nor the intellectual roots to appreciate the problems of Europe and to feel an affinity for European culture.

Beyond this, the political agenda on which he was elected, depending as it does on legislation, inevitably gives top priority to domestic issues. The net result is to reinforce an essentially negative, risk-free and non-creative approach to foreign policy one that hides behind confrontation and is so fearful of compromises of principle that it regards each consultation with allies as a potential trap.

Those negative tendencies are par-ticularly noticeable on the economic front. There is overwhelming evi-dence that the resources of the International Monetary Fund are inadequate to shore up the rickety strucnire of international credit. Nevertheless, even as the nation with the most at stake, the United States torpedoed efforts to double the fund's lending capacity. Again, having the most at stake in a comprehensive legal regime for the oceans, only the United States among leading maritime nations opposed the recently completed Law of the Sea treaty. A similar negative attitude has characterized the Reagan approach to arms control and elimination of trade restrictions. Alone among Western nations, the United States refuses to establish routine diplomatic relations with Cuba, Angola and Vietnam.

The crippling effects of a sterile conservative ideology masquerading as principle are exemplified by the administration's approach to international organizations.

In December 1981, it cut off funding for the International Institute of Applied Systems Analysis, a globally acclaimed experiment in East-West scientific cooperation, thereby closing off a valuable window to the West for Polish, Czech, Hungarian and Bulgar-

Bersaglieri in Beirut: The Cuban "linkage" ploy was an almighty spanner to throw into the works; if it is now removed and the South Africans try to throw Rome's Calculations another, we will all know where they really — The Guardian (London).

By Enrico Jacchia

ROME — The presence in Beirut of the Bersaglieri, reinforced by some elite units of the paratroops and marines, represents the first important commitment of Italian military forces outside the nation's boundaries. The decision to send the troops was taken by the government in an atmosphere of great national emo-tion. The news of the Beirut mas-sacre had reached the Italian public while Yasser Arafat was still in Rome. With a few exceptions, the Italian press gave the PLO leader a warm welcome. Most party leaders had received him with the manifest intention of conferring upon their guest a measure of recognition.

of the U.S. Rapid Deployment

Force. Most parties have opposed this for years, but many politicians are now ready to consider such a project because of the dangerous situation that has developed along the Mediterranean's southern shores and in the Gulf. The assembling of the Lebanese task force at short notice created many problems. Defense Ministry sources say that proves that an emergency force is needed. A second element is the belief by some politicians that Italy has a special role to play in the Mediterranean as a bridge between Europe and the Arab world. Such a role would imply some independence from NATO policies and some sympathy to Arab interests. For different reasons, the Communist Party shares the conception of a strongly pro-Arab policy.

A third element is this: The American, French and Italian troops now are filling a vacuum in Beirut, thereby denying access to the Soviet Union or its allies. After the horror of the massacre the protection of the Palestinians is a moral imperative. But Prime Minister Giovanni Spadolini, who has been careful to keep a balanced position between Mr. Arafat and the Israelis, is a loyal support-er of the alliance. And the value of reasserting the Western presence in Lebanon cannot be overlooked. International Herald Tribune.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Regarding "The Horror and Shame" (IHT, Sept. 22): The editorial states: "There are Lebanese precedents for the barbarity in Beirut last weekend. But there are no Israeli precedents." The massacre of 250 unarmed civilians of all ages and both sexes at Deir Uassin in 1948 by Menachem Begin's Irgun, and the subsequent stuffing of the corpses down the village well presumably does not qualify.

Nor does Ariel Sharon's "punitive raid" on Quibya in 1954, when 61 Palestinians were blown up in their shuttered homes. The killing of Lebanese civilians by cluster and phosphorous bombs in Is-raeli bombing raids on Beirut, and the denial of power, food and water to the stricken population must also fall in the category of "civilized."

Guilt for the latest barbarism lies largely with those who have unreservedly supported and encouraged Israel, since its inception, in its callous persecution of the Palestinians, and with those who have character ized the dispersion of the Palestinians and the repression in the occupied territories of those who remained as anything other than barbaric. A.K. HICKEY.

As a Dutchman, pretty proud of Holland's "oldest airline in the world" — KLM had started in 1921, I remember correctly - I felt that the American gentleman was going a bit off the deep end. Landing in Rotterdam, I pointed out the criticizing gentleman to an old KLM friend of mine, who was manager of the Rotterdam Waalhaven airport.

My friend, Toon Tolk, asked me whether I knew who the gentleman was, to which I had to give a negative answer. "That's Anthony Fokker," he said. He explained that only a short time before, Fokker had become the exclusive European salesman for the metal Douglas aircraft!

Mexico's Strategic Role

Regarding "U.S. Latin Policy: Nar-rower Approach Needed" (IHT, Sept. 2): I was amused by Charles Maechl-ing's article about U.S. Latin American policy. He says, and rightly, that we should stop thinking of Latin America as a unified whole. Then, further on, he falls into a similar error by saying Mexico is the key to U.S. strategy in Central America In fact, Mexico has little if any bearing on the region. Although Mexico may make a show of regarding Central America with parental concern, the reciprocal is by no means true. Central America does not regard Mexico, and never has, with filial respect or anything remotely like it.

A much better U.S. strategy in Central America would be to leave Mexican politicians out of ir, and tell them to mind their own business which is the Mexican economy.

Regarding "People" (IHT, Sept. 25-26): On the subject of the hat of the former governor of the Falkland Is-iands, General Menendez: The his-torical reason for that rather grotesque piece of headgear stems from the first British invasion of Bucnos Aires in 1806.

Sir Home Popham, after accomplishing his mission of taking the Cape from the Dutch in 1805, decided to try his luck with the Spanish colony of the River Plata. were captured. In a city where security and intelligence cells extend to street neighborhoods and residents report visitors to local watchdog committees, the attack was a stunning surprise. Burmese are now asking how the guerrillas, using a stolen car for the attack, managed to remain unde-tected and assemble an arsenal of heavy-caliber weapons before opening up with gunfire and grenade explosions.

Military weapons are banned from the capital under security regulations enforced after an attempted comp eight years ago. Troops garrisoned in the city are not allowed to carry guns, except for elite forces guarding government leaders.

Local newspapers reported that security forces confiscated a cache of weapons from the rebels, including rocket-propelled grenade launchers, automatic rifles, pistols, land mines, two slabs of plastic explosives and nearly 300 rounds of

Now SAS has turned Business Class into Next-to-First Class.

Do you remember what it was like flying First Class before the airlines installed sleeper seats?

Now we're raising our Business Class up close to that standard. You get Next-to-First Class chairs. Close to First Class comfort. First Class service. Meals on china. A choice of entrées.

And more...

The only thing we haven't raised is the price. It's far from First Class.

Just the normal economy fare.

Calling this new class simply Business Class doesn't do it justice at all. So we had to invent a new name to describe this new service:

First Business Class.

First to tell you how much you get. Business to tell you how little you pay. A very nice combination, wouldn't you say?

Superb Springsteen Album

ational Herald Tribune

DARIS - Bruce Springsteen's "Nebraska" (CBS) is about as close to catharsis as a rock record has ever come.

On his new solo album, Springsteen deals with American violence, unemployment, exploitation, alienation and commotion with such sensitivity that he turus desolation into art.

Springsteen is the big man on the scene right now, the only rock star who can put it all together sensuality, swing, intelligence and sales. He is the heir to the Beatles and Bob Dylan, not only in degree of talent, but because he now reveals an ability to change both sears and direction. Ordinarily, he tresses volume and raw energy. A few hours of listening to Spring-steen's standard repertoire can be like swallowing a fistful of benzedmonica or acoustic guitar singing ballads more than songs — some of these stories are like talking blues — revealing '80s America, just as Woody Guthrie revealed 30s and 40s America and Dylan '60s America. With cries, groans, rasps and wails, he makes folk music more than rock — not in the ethnic, limited, frozen, arty, pe-jorative sense. Just songs for folks. There are no songs about being rich and famous, no crying about the trials and tribulations of success or the anguish of creativity. Rarely since Woody Guthrie has popular music reached such altruistic poetic, proletarian passion.

It sounds like he's singing alone in his kitchen at 3 A.M. (This does not refer to the record's technical quality, which is excellent.) Perhaps he was lonely himself, too down to set complicated rockband logistics in motion, to coordinate production, rehearse and explain and cut multiple takes and overdubs and then spend months mixing it. These songs come out of a sense of urgency, of desperation, and he makes us feel with him. And by dealing with these emotions rather than ignoring or escaping them, Springsteen helps heal us because, at least, somebody a child dreaming that he is lost in a pine forest, trying to find his way home at sunset. He runs "with the devil snappin' at my heels." When he wakes up he remembers "the hard things that pulled us apart," and he goes to his father's house, but a woman speaks to him "through a chained door" and says: "I'm sorry son but no one by that name lives here anymore."

Joe Roberts, the highway patrolman, "always done an honest job as honest as I could." He has a brother, Franky, and "Franky ain't no good." Franky went into the army and Joe married and bought a farm, but wheat prices kept dropping and "it was like we were gettin' robbed." So he joined the state police. One night there was "trouble in a roadhouse out on the Michigan line" and when he got there Joe found "a kid lyin' on the floor lookin' bad, bleedin' from his head." Witnesses said "it was Frank" and Joe took off after him: "I must have done 110 through Michigan County that night." He begins to catch up but then re-members "me and Franky laughin' and drinkin'" and that "nothin feels better than blood on blood." He pulls over and watches Franky's taillights disappear, saying to himself: "Man turns his back on his family well he just ain't no

Milan Fashions: Strong Start

MILAN — The Italian fashion season started Monday with a bang. Top talent Gianfranco Ferre, who usually shows last, showed first. Krizia, Versace and Mario Valentino also made the day a star-studded start.

This new schedule has given the Italian fashion week a stronger beat. "I was shamed into it by my friends," said Ferre, "who told me it was too easy to show last and reap all the applause." So he showed first, but the result was pretty much the same for the shy. roly-poly, bearded designer, whose contemporary voice is one of the strongest around. to acknowledge the importance of fashion in our economy," Capria said after the Ferre show. "It's the first time I've seen a fashion collection and I found it a cultural experience," he added, noting the Japanese as well as American influences in Ferre's collection.

On the whole, the Italians have cleaned up their act in more ways than one. The shows are better organized and there is less hysteria. fewer histrionics and a more professional pace. As a matter of fact, the atmosphere was so low-key that when the designers came on the runway after the finale, the audience almost had to do a double take before realizing it was over

The Milan spring and summer collections are also a cleaner slate fashion-wise. Summer agrees with the Italian designers in any case, and it is a big time for white linen, pale suedes and sophisticated swimwear with the latest in derriere décolletage.

Although there are still a lot of pants around (but always cut short to the ankles and loose), dresses are making a definite comeback, with Ferre's white linen chemise and Krizia's draped satin sheaths the best so far.

It is no secret that the Italians do not know how to make a big ball gown, but more and more they are coming out with a sophisticated and contemporary evening look, best summed up by Ferre's charmeuse tuxedos and Krizia's draped satins. Satin and sequins are behind the Milan designers'

Hollywood approach to glamour. Ferre has changed and yet remained the same. The collection he showed Monday was cut just as severely as in the past but he has taken the starch out of his look, removing the heavy padding, the tight corseting and the generally abstract and uncomfortable feel of his clothes. "It's designed for the American customer," said Ira American customer," said Ira Neimark, president of Bergdorf Goodman

He was dead right. Ferre, who created a special resort collection for the de luxe American boutique Martha last spring after a personal appearance at the store's Palm Beach branch, said he had had a chance to get acquainted with the American customer and to see his clothes live. The experience made him realize, he said, that in order to succeed he had to make some concessions to comfort.

Hence a much more wearable Ferre, with big, loose blousons sliding down the shoulder, softly draped dresses décolleté to the waist, and wide, sequined obis, which now come off instead of sewn onto satin pants. Perre's big specialty is a carefully controlled geometric cut plus a rare and happy hand in mixing fabrics and colors. The softness is an added boous.

Every season Krizia gains ground, and its designer, Marinecia Mandelli, has now acquired a new dimension. She is doing more serious tailoring with impece slightly hourglass suits and soft coats, also known as dressmakers coats. White gloves and big white carnations in the lapels are typically pristine Mandelli touches.

With a combination of hard work, total dedication and perfect business organization (the latter courtesy of her husband, Aldo Pinto). Mandelli is reaching the lofty top without losing her sense of humor. Her nearly surrealistic, cauli-flower-looking dresses and her wildly iridescent fabrics are her twinkle in the eye, her way of saying let's have a laugh in the middle of very serious work.

Mandelli's other amusing touches include bare-breasted mermaids on the backs of terry robes, mock alligator bustiers, and skirts and pants made of thin cork that looks like glazed cotton. Her famous animal sweater collection now includes an alligator, its mouth ei-ther open or closed.

The Milan fashion week ends Thursday evening. About 12,000 people are in town attending the three fashion fairs: Modit, Milanovendemoda and the Milan collec-

Peter Pan of Pop

In his king-size spectacle, "A Tout casser," Johnny Hallyday appears as a barbaric warnor, as a hot-rodder and, in his more familiar form, as a rousing rocker. The blue-eyed blond boy, nearing 40, remains amazingly unchanged, a Peter Pan of the pop music world, but he has changed and enlarged his act. Part Two is more conventional, with Johnny in a blue lame jacket conducting a cabaret floor show, blasting out numbers old and new and reviving his Frenchized image of the Elvis Pres-ley of the '60s. "Coup de soleil" by Marcel Mithois is a cleverly confected farce with a sound basis for sure-fire success. Its premise is that young men today prefer mature women - a notion that is certain to bring bids from Hollywood, where ments, and where it will be probably sentimentalized

Jacqueline Maillan, a favorite comedienne, is an expert caricaturist and plays her role for loud laughter, portraying a dowager passionate-ly wooed by an athletic florist (Roger Mirmont) 30 years her junior. The situation is more or less that of the enormously profitable "40 Carats" by Barillet and Gredy, which was made into an American film. At the Antoine there is strong support from Jean-Pierre Aumont as an elegant older beau and from Odile Mallet as a fading wallflower who captures the heart of the dowager's 20-year-old son. Tailored to the taste of a large public and staged spiritedly by Jacques Rosuy, the play's prosperity is guaranteed.

Trieste Prospering Again as Yugoslavs Commute to Shop

By Andrew Hurst

TRIESTE, Italy - Trieste, the once-thriving Adriatic seaport that declined after the fall of the Austro-Hungarian empire 64 years ago, is etijoying a boom.

The streets are often clogged with thousands of Yugoslavs in cars and buses who flock here on day trips to stock up on coffee, clothes and other goods that are in short supply in their own country. Many have saved for months to come on buying sprees, and they have brought much-needed business to the economically beleaguered port. The daily influx of Yugoslavs is so great that Trieste

Sunggling Coffee

Yugoslavia restricts the importa-tion of coffee to a half-kilogram (1.1 pounds) per person, but the visitors have devised several methods to fool their customs authorities on the return journey.

The simplest but riskjest method is to stuff as many bags of coffee as possible under a car seat in the hope that the vehicle will not be searched at the border.

Others get around the restric-tions by mailing coffee bags in in-dividual parcels to scores of their friends in Yugoslavia. Italian post office workers complain that their sorting offices have been inundated with the coffee parcels and that they are faced with a backlog of several weeks.

The demise of the port was accelerated in the 1950s, when the onset of the Cold War and the establishment of a communist state beyond the frontier cansed further disruption to trade. Only one of the seven jetties in the port is working today, and along the harbor rows of derricks, many of them erected by Austrian engineers at the turn of the century, are rusting. Coffee traders have cashed in on the Yugoslav thirst for coffee. Diego Allaix, a Trieste-based coffee roaster, says his business has nearly doubled in the last year because of the Yugoslav demand.

But the Triestini have mixed feelings about the source of their new-found wealth. Trieste is now the most expensive city in Italy, and its inflation rate outstrips the rest of the country, a fact many of den shoppers from Yugoslavia. Many Triestini also believe that their city has become too dependent on Yugosiavia for comfort.

"They have brought us an artificial wealth that could collapse at any moment," said Luciano Cabasso, a customs official in Trieste. Others believe that Yugoslavia has not given up its territorial designs on Trieste despite signing a treaty seven years ago that settled a longstanding border dispute between the two countries. They are uneasy about the endless flow of Yugoslav day visitors.

But their biggest fears are based on Yugoslav demands, enshrined in its inhabitants attribute to cash-lathe 1975 treaty, for a mixed indus-trial zone straidling the frontier.

They believe that such a zone would encourage thousands of immigrant workers from Yugoslavia to settle in Trieste, putting a strain on the local economy and possibly resurrecting the old border dis-

Survey Finds China Damages Environment

By Bayard Webster Ven York Times Service

NEW YORK -- China is causing widespread and serious damage to its natural environment in its efforts to quadruple its economic output in the next 20 years, according to a survey of the published writings of more than a score of Chinese scientists.

Vast forest areas have been denuded, lakes and streams have been polluted and substantial soil erosion and loss of arable land have occurred, the survey reports, as China has expanded and up-

The consensus among the scientists, writing in official scientific and political papers published in Chinese journals, is that the environmental deterioration poses a serious threat to China's physical well-being and hence to its social stability. First Comprehensive View

The survey, to be published in the October issue of The Bulletin of the Atomic Scientists, was made by Dr. Vaclav Smil, professor of geography at the University of Manitoba in Winnipeg, Canada.

It is believed to be the first comprehensive view of all aspects of prehensive view of all aspects of the condition of China's natural

In an interview, Mr. Smil said that when taken taken together, "the dimensions and implications of China's environmental degradation" were devastating.

The conclusions echo those of several frank accounts that have appeared since the end of the Mao's Cultural Revolution era in 1976, when Chinese scientists did not dare publish such critical as-sessments. Mr. Smil's study inchides dozens of reports of envinonmental mistreatment that have resulted from practices of the Mao regime as well as the detrimental impact of the present emphasis on rapid economic improvement

Mr. Smil pointed out that about 800 million people among China's estimated population of more than one billion were rural inhabitants. Yet, he said, only about a tenth of. their fuel accds was furnished by coal, the only readily available fuel. He cited reports that people burned stumps, roots, branches, bark, twigs and leaves as fuel.

Even with such drastic measures, Chinese peasants are acutely short of fuel, Mr. Smil reported. Official estimates acknowledge that about 500 million people suffer from a serious lack of fuel for three to five months a year.

In addition to the demands on trees for fuel use, huge forest areas have been cleared for agriculture. Areas such as the provinces of Sichuan and Yunan show losses of forest cover of 30 percent and 45 percent in the last two decades. Despite mass tree-planting programs initiated since 1950, the Chinese Ministry of Forestry estimated last year that no more than one-third of all saplings managed to survive, owing to careless planting, lack of scientific care and other poor practices.

Mr. Smil said studies showed that China, as a result of its "grain first" policy, was now annually producing about 70 percent more grain than it did in the late 1950s. But, he said, because of the increasing population, there has been no improvement in the already-low food-energy intake of the average Chinese.

But by expanding grain produc-tion, he said, forests have been de-stroyed, lakes filled in, "resulting in higher soil erosion rates and widespread ecosystemic disrup-tion." The most serious impact, he said, has been the loss of 30 per-cent of the country's farmland in the last two decades.

The study also reports that the forest denudation has led to chemical pollution of lakes and streams, affecting fish and aquatic plant Mr. Smil is writing a book on China's environment and is pre-

BUSINESS BRIEFS Dome Holders Sue Canada, Banks

TORONTO - Dome Petroleum Ltd. shareholders filed a class action suit in the Ontario supreme court against the federal government and four Canadian banks for damages caused by Dome's refinancing plan.

The shareholders filed for recovery of damages for alleged trespass of property and conspiracy in the "expropriation of the capital property of the common shareholders."

Under an agreement signed by Dome last week, the company's four major Canadian banks and the federal government are to provide as much as I billion Canadian dollars ($809 million) of cash and restructure Dome's debt. In return, the banks and government are to obtain a controlling interest in Dome. Analysts have said new shares issued under the accord would seriously dilute the equity of current shareholders, and the share price as fallen to around 3 dollars from 5.125 two weeks ago.

Named as defendants in the lawsuit are the government of Canada. Energy Mines and Resources Canada, Toronto Dominion Bank, Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, Royal Bank of Canada and Bank of

Kodak Announces 1000-Speed Film

ROCHESTER, New York - The Eastman Kodak Co. announced Monday the development of what it called the world's fastest color film, which will be available in 1983. The new 35mm film's speed rating, reflecting its relative sensitivity to light, is 1000, 10 times faster than Kodacolor II film. Picture-taking possibilities are expected to be significantly widened by the film, called VR 1000.

Kodak said the film would allow photographers to make pictures in dim light conditions, provide a greater choice of higher shutter speeds to stop action and allow greater latitude in the use of telephoto lenses. The company said it had altered the light-sensitive silver-halide crystals in film to "substantially improve their photographic utility."

Lasmo Finds Heavy Oil in North Sea

LONDON — London & Scottish Marine Oil (Lasmo) has found heavy oil in its first well on North Sea block 3/27, a company spokesman said Monday. The drill rig has left the block, the spokesman said, but further wells are likely after geological data have been subject to more study. Because of the oil's texture, he said, technological improvements are likely to be necessary before a field could be developed. Lasmo and the state-owned Britoil Ltd. have equal stakes in the block.

Bayer Announces Shortened Shifts

BONN - Bayer, the chemical group, said Monday its Leverkusen and Dormagen plants would be put on short-time in the coming weeks for the first time since October 1980. A spokesman in Leverkusen said 1,340 workers there would begin working reduced hours in mid-October, and 2.250 at Dormagen would do so starting in early November.

It is impossible to say how long the short-time working will last, the spokesman said, but the economic outlook indicates no sudden upturn in demand. He said no announcement on whether the company would be able to maintain the dividend paid on 1981 results was likely before late

GAF, Companies Discussing Merger

The merger proposal was first disclosed on March 22 and was amplified in a June 29 letter to shareholders. In a new letter to shareholders, Jesse Werner, the GAF chairman, said two companies had signed agreements to talk about a possible overall merger, but talks with a third company had broken off.

Mr. Werner said the struggling business materials division had shown steady improvement over the past three months, and that the chemicals business "has held up well in spite of the economy."

Western Union to Buy Johnson Co.

UPPER SADDLE RIVER, New Jer The Western Union Corp. said Monday it would acquire the E.F. Johnson Co. in an exchange of stock valued at $132 million. Upon completion of the plan, each share of E.F. Johnson common stock will be converted into one share of Western Union common stock. As of Sept. 30, there were 3.2 million shares of Johnson common stock outstanding and 20.5 million shares of Western Union. Western Union provides telecommunications systems and services, and E.F. Johnson manufactures mobile telecommunications equipment and electronic components. In a separate agreement, Johnson has granted Western Union an option to purchase 575,000 shares of its common stock at $28.50 a

Amax Unit Considers Selling a Mine

CLAYTON, Missouri - Amax Inc. said Monday its Amax Lead and Zinc division was discussing the possible sale of its 50 percent interest in the Buick lead and zince mine, lead smelter and related facilities in southeast Missouri to the Exxon Minerals Co., part of the Exxon Corp. Amax said neither its zinc refinery in Sanget, Illinois, nor other Amex lead and zinc properties were involved. Subsidiaries of Amax and the Homestake Mining Co. each hold a 50 percent interest in the Buick mine, mill and smelter complex.

S. Africa Requests IMF Loan

PRETORIA — South Africa announced Monday that it had applied to borrow the equivalent of $1.07 billion from the International Monetary Fund to help the country alleviate its balance of payments problems.

Finance Minister Owen Hor-wood said the loan of 1 billion Special Drawing Rights, the IMF unit of account, will be at from 6 to 7 percent, an interest rate Mr. Horwood termed "very reasonable." An equivalent loan on world capital markets would have carried interest of about 13 to 14 percent,

The money would be drawn down over a period of up to three years with repayment over about the same period.
"These funds," Mr. Horwood said, "will not be made available for domestic consumption or investment or for financing the bud-get, but may be used solely to achieve a sustainable equilibrium in our balance of payments posi-tion and at the same time to strengthen our foreign reserves."

Mr. Horwood said that in sup-Mr. Horwood said that in sup-port of the program the 10 percent import surcharge imposed in Feb-ruary this year was reduced to 7.5 percent effective immediately. When asked why South Africa had not applied earlier this year for the loan, he said the delay was due to the proceedancy of the world due to the uncertainty of the world economy which, according to some views, should have started an upturn by the second half of the year. Mr. Horwood said it became obvious by July that the upturn would not start this year so the application was made now, following consultations at the recent IMF annual meeting in Toronto.

"I am fully confident," he said, with the assistance now requested and the measures already in place, the necessary adjustments to the balance of payments will be made on a healthy fiscal and monetary foundation.

The country's payments deficit swelled to $3.44 billion in 1981, and as the gold price headed down toward $300 an ounce earlier this year, compared with a high of more than $800, the first quarter returns suggested the deficit would rise further to some $5.85 billion

Allister Sparks of The Washington Post reported from Johannesburg: The South African government denied at the IMF meeting a month ago that it intended to apply for a loan. At that time, 35 members of the U.S. Congress appealed to Treasury Secretary Donald T. Regan to instruct American representatives at the meeting to oppose the expected South African

The congressmen made the request because of what they called South Africa's "aggressive foreign policies and its internal policies of segregation."

On Sept. 3, the Johannesburg
Financial Mail quoted the governor of the South African reserve bank, Gerhard de Kock, as saying before leaving for the Toronto meeting that South Africa did not need an IMF loan. Both Mr. de Kock and Mr. Hor-wood repeated this denial in interviews in Toronto two days later.

Traders crowded ring in Chicago last week to practice dealing in Treasury bond futures contracts. Board shows prices then.

Options on Futures: For Speculative Minds

By Karen W. Arenson New York Times Service

First there were commodity futures contracts. Then there were stock options. Now, in New York and Chicago, there are options on commodi-

Most commodity experts readily concede that commodity options, which became available Friday, will add to the complexity of an already tangled web of financial investments. But they predict that individuals with a speculative bent will flock to the new contracts, where they can seek the huge gains for which commodity markets are noted but avoid the equally dramatic losses that commodity traders often suffer.

Unlike the futures markets, where traders have virtually unlimited risk, option buyers never stand to lose any more money than the price paid for the option, known as the premium. In the world of commodities, a market where one can lose no more than one's entire investment is considered low-risk.

"This is definitely something for the little guy because he knows what his risk is going to be," said Thomas Ramseth, a floor manager for Paine Webber Inc. at the Chicago Board of Trade. "While it may be hard to find people who know all about futures, options and Government securities — or other commodities — they can learn. And it will behoove everyone to learn because there are so many advantages."

A call option on a commodity contract gives the buyer the right to purchase a futures contract for a set price at any time within a certain period. No matter what happens to the price of the commodity in that time, the option buyer has the right, but not the obligation, to demand delivery of the futures contract at the predetermined price.

The people promoting these markets also say the options will open new and safer opportunities for businesses — from banks and insurance companies to jewelry designers and trading hims - to protect themselves from the vagaries of volatile markets, although the learning curve could be steen.

"Options are like getting a second bite out of the apple," said James (Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Dollar Surges on Fears Fed Will Tighten Credit

By Bob Hagerty temptional Herald Tribune

PARIS - The dollar spurted again Monday in response to last week's U.S. money-supply report, but some foreign exchange dealers and analysts said the market was Prompting Monday's jump, which brought the dollar to a 12-month high of more than 2.55 to the Deutche mark, was the report Friday by the U.S. Federal Reserve that the M-1 money supply rose $400 million in the week ended Sept. 22, the analysts said. That was a modest rise, but it caught the market off guard. Most analysts had been predicting a decline of several billion dollars.

"I think the market is wrong to worry," said David F.B. Ashby, chief economist at Grindlays Bank in London. He noted that the Fed has shown willingness to let money supply growth exceed its targets and is unlikely to tighten credit substantially as long as the U.S.

Given the U.S. economy's weakness, said Baudouin Charles, head of the foreign exchange advisory group at Morgan Guaranty Trust in Paris, "we fail to see how the Americans can afford to tighten up their monetary screws."

Nonetheless, many traders evidently did worry that the Fed would tighten credit -- or at least worried that such worries would cause other traders to push the dollar up. While Mr. Charles did not see any basic change in the Fed's policy, he said the recent bulge in M-I could keep the Fed from cutting its discount rate for a few more weeks. Before Friday's money sup-ply report, many in the credit markets were saying a cut in the discount rate, the fee the Fed charges on loans to commercial banks, to percent from 10 percent was High U.S. interest rates were supposed to be old hat in the currency market. Mr. Ashby said many analysts expected the market to pay less attention to rates after they fell several points in the United States and Europe last summer. But, he said, interest rates continue to move the market.

Even if U.S. rates do resume their decline, said Gavyn Davies, senior economic consultant at Simon & Coates in London, European rates will fall just as fast, preserving the interest-rate advantage of holding dollars. For that reason, he said, the dollar at the moment "a one-way bet."

NYSE Prices Rally After Sharp Drop

NEW YORK — Prices on the New York Stock Exchange fell Monday under the pressures of an unexpected gain in the U.S. money supply, rises in some interest rates and disappointing economic news.

The Dow Jones industrial average dropped as much as 11½ points in the first hour of trading but pulled back by midday and finished with a decline of 4.13 points, to 903.61. Declines led advances by around 850 to 600, and volume slowed to about 55 million shares from 65 million on Friday. The M-1 measure of the weekly money supply announced Friday was widely expected to drop $1 billion to $3 billion, but actually rose by $400 million.

The increase left M-1 about $4 billion above the limit of the Federal Reserve's target growth range of 21/2 to 51/2 percent annually. Economists expect money supply figures over the next couple of weeks to push M-1 even further above target.

Analysts said investors are con-

Michael Metz of Oppenheimer & Co. said the market performed better than expected considering all the dismal background news. "I think what we are seeing is a bull market going through a correction rather than the start of a major downtrend," he said.

Johnson & Johnson, the leader in trading volume, slid 2% to 41 on turnover of 1,466,800 shares, adding to last week's total loss of 31/4. The stock has been skidding ever since reports started emerging last week that seven deaths in the Chicago area may have been caused by cyanide-laced Extra Strength Tylenol capsules.

Powers in New U.S. Banking Law May Rekindle Price War on Loans

By Robert A. Bennett New York Times Service NEW YORK - A price war betweet thrift institutions and small commercial banks could result from the landmark banking bill that won final Congressional approval last week. The renewed competition beween the longtime rivals could occur, banking analysts say, if a large number of savings and loan associations make use of the new commercial lending powers that the bill makes available to them. Under the new law, the nation's approximately 5,000 thrift institutions — savings banks and savings and loan associations - are allowed to make commercial loans up to 10 percent of their total assets. They would be competing pri-marily against 14,000 small commercial banks.

The benefactors are expected to be small businesses that, until now, have been totally dependent on their local banks for credit. With thrift institutions now allowed to make business loans, borrowing options could increase for many small companies and prices could

Thrifts Could Charge Less

"There is a lot of room to com pete," said Allan G. Bortel, firs vice president for research a Shearson/American Express in San Francisco, "If small banks ar charging their business borrower one or two percentage points above prime, the thrifts could charge less and still make money."

But many bankers fear that the result will be that both the thrif institutions and the banks wil lose. Many analysts have been predicting that the nation is already overbanked and that, even before the latest measure, market forces would cause many banks to go out of business. Now, instead of 14,000 or so institutions lending to small, local companies, the mimber could grow to 18,000 or 19,000.

"All of a sudden we have 4,000 new commercial banks on the scene," said Liewellyn Jenkins, president of the American Bankers Association and vice chairman of the Manufacturers Hanover Trust Company. 'Sweetheart Bill' Alleged For this reason, although most banks are pleased with the provision in the bill that allows them to offer higher rates to attract deposits back from money-market mumal funds, many are disturbed by the measure, calling it a "sweet-heart bill" for the thrift institu-

My judgment is that this is not such a great thing." Mr. Jenkins said. "This is a way the thrifts might be able to help themselves in the long run, but they can't do it overnight. They could get into a lot of trouble."

It remains unclear how many savines and loan associations will begin making business loans in the near future. Even some thrift execmives are not sure.

"I don't know if we will or not," said Thadis R. Seifert, executive vice president of the Southern Missouri Savings and Loan Asso-ciation in Poplar Bluff, an institution with assets of $122 million. Mr. Seifert said that, until about four years ago, Southern Missouri been making commercial loans that were secured by real estate, which is allowed by Missouri law. But Federal regulators "were too nit-picky" about these loans. so Southern Missouri's board de-(Continued on Page 13, Col. 1)

Purchasing Agents Say U.S. Outlook Is Worse

United Press International

NEW YORK — U.S. industrial activity slackened and employment was lower during the third quarter, according to the latest survey of U.S. purchasing managers.

The National Association of Purchasing Management said Sunday that 53 percent of its members found that business conditions in the third quarter were worse than in the solond, while 21 percent said conditions had improved.

The association said that the job picture grew darker in the last month. Only 5 percent of the members reported higher employment, while 45 percent said payrolls were lower. This compares with 7 and 42 percent respectively in August.

The survey also reported that producing was lower last month, although September is usually a month during which there is upswing and employees are called back to work.

Pessimism about the future increased in survey said. Only 22 percent of the manufacture optimistic, while 20 percent said they were worried. This compares with and 15 percent a year ago.

Options on Futures Put Some Limits on Risks

"In the futures market," he said, "if the market moves against you, you may have no flexibility except to trade out of the market. With options, you can eliminate the risk of a move without taking yourself out of the market."

One measure of the complexity of these new products is that most sophisticated traders are approaching them armed with computer models to calculate appropriate option values. Many brokerage firms will rely on models to provide advice to clients, too. At the Commodity Exchange in New York, where options on gold futures were offered Monday, there is even a computer terminal at the trading ring so traders can punch in their assumptions about interest rates and commodity market volatility to find what an appropriate bid might be.

Despite all the complexity and despite the fact that many new financial instrument contracts have foundered, some industry people

"Commercial checking and commercial lending will bring us low-cost funds and give us the ability to make loans even when high interest rates shut down the mort-gage market," said Roy G. Green,

In Tokyo, the dollar finished at 272.45 yeu, up from 268.60 Friday and the highest since June 1977. The yen, which until recently had widely recommended as a been. good buy, has proved itself a "nice way to lose money," Mr. Charles said. Analysts ascribed the yen's weakness to Japan's feeble export performance of recent months and signs that the country is running out of foreign exchange to defend the currency.

The French franc slumped a record low of 7.2070 at the Paris fixing. The government "certainly is making a very determined effort " to avoid another devaluation, which would be the third since the Socialists took power in June 1981, said Mr. Ashby of Grindleys. But he and others said the $4-billion loan being arranged by France to build up its funds for defending the franc is unlikely to do more than delay a plunge in the franc, perhaps until around year-end. Some analysts said they doubt France would be able to support the franc against a heavy wave of selling. Mr. Davies said he sees "no chance whatever" to prevent a devaluation.

Canada's Reserves Decline

OTTAWA - Canada's foreign reserves fell $73.2 million in September to $3.79 billion from $3.86 billion at the end of August, the country's Finance Department said Monday. The decrease reflects, among other things, repay-ments of $250 million on the standby credit with foreign banks and $300 million on a credit with Canadian banks.

Mr. Green predicted that Fideli-

In New York state, savings banks have been allowed to make commercial loans up to 5 percent of their total assets since late 1981. So far, the Dime Savings Bank, the largest in New York with total assets of $6.2 billion, has made $150 million in business loans, according to John W. Sapanski, senior executive vice president.

Mr. Sapanski said that to head its commercial-lending division the Dime has hired James J. Bolster, a former official of the New York State Banking Department and of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation. Mr. Bolster had been president of the Nassau Trust Company immediately before he joined the Dime.

"The potential for retail participation in this market is just unlimited," said Matt Zachowski, director of marketing at the Commodity Exchange. "Initially, not everyone will be ready to jump in. But over time, I think public interest in this product will be enormous."

Although the variety of options will be limited at first, it is expected to expand quickly. Two commodity options made their debut last week: options on sugar futures at New York's Coffee, Sugar and Cocoa Exchange and options on Treasury bond futures at the Chicago Board of Trade. On Monday, New York's Commodity Exchange introduced gold futures options.

Smaller Gold Option Due Later this fall the MidAmerica Commodity Exchange in Chicago is expected to introduce a second, smaller gold futures option. Four other commodity exchanges have option applications pending in Washington — three for options on stock index futures contracts and one for options on heating oil futures.

Most securities exchanges would also like to offer options on many of those commodities. So far, how-ever, they have been stymied be-cause a recent court ruling held that, unless Congress changes the law, the Securities and Exchange Commission does not have authority to approve commodity options. The House of Representatives recently gave its assent, but the Senate has not yet voted.

Commodity options are not strictly new, but they have had a checkered history in the United States, including many cases of abuse as recently as the late 1970's.

After an earlier ban on the sale of all commodity options in the United States, except for those of-fered by a couple of well-respected

gan Friday. Call and Put Options

Each exchange will offer both call options and put options.
Where the buyer of a call option is purchasing the right to buy a futures contract at a set price (known as the strike price of exercise price), the buyer of a put option is purchasing the right to sell a futures contract, also at a predetermined price, within a certain period of time. If the commodity price falls, the purchaser of a put option makes a profit, Typically, the commodity ex-changes will offer options expiring in several different months and at several different price levels. The Comex, for example, will offer op-tions on December 1982 futures contracts, April 1983 futures, August 1983 futures and December 1983 futures. (Each option will ac-tually expire in the month prior to the expiration of the futures contract. Strike prices will be based on the price of the underlying com-modity at the time the options start trading, and more will be added as the commodity price rises or falls. If gold is trading at $378 on the day before the options start trading, for example, one strike price will be set close to that price ($380), two will be set below ($360) and $340) and two above ($400 and $420).

How much an option costs will be determined in the market depending on the buy and sell orders for the options, when the option expires, how volatile the underlying commodity is and what the commodity costs relative to the striking price of the option.

Inflation Slows In Major Nations

The Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The International Monetary Fund said Monday that 12-month rate of consumer price inflation in industrial countries was 7.0 percent in August, down from 7.4 percent in July.

The fund attributed the apparent easing in inflationary pressures to recession, the softness of oil and commodity prices and moderation in wage demands.

The government's debt management office said that only $39 million remain of that amount. However, the Danish government still has unused foreign standby credits totaling $1.45 billion.

The new bill will ask for authorization to borrow $1.7 billion in new money, and for authority to undertake a rescheduling of existing debts on a running basis.

On the basis of currency rates at the end of August, the debt management office calculated the instalments falling due before the end of 1983 at $990 million.

The rescheduling plan would also permit a shift to short-term loans, down to maturities of three months, to achieve lower interest and attract a wider range of investors. But the debt management office said there are no immediate plans for such short-term borrow-

BECOMING A HEROINE By Rachel M. Brownstein. 332 pp. $17.95. The Viking Press, 625 Madison Ave., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Anatole Broyard COTHE HISTORY of women,"

writes Rachel Brownstein,
"has been seriously affected by the history of the novel." "Women who read," she continues, "have been inclined since the 18th century to understand one another, and men, and themselves, as characters in novels." Because they have been traditionally denied the active forms of expression available to men, "girls tend to live more in novels than boys do, and to live longer in them." The female reader "feels part of a community and a tradition of women who talk well about their lives and link them, by language to larger subjects."

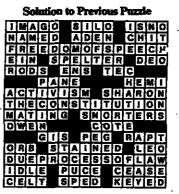

"Becoming a Herome" derives its title from Brownstein's central thesis: that this is what novels encourage women to do. "It is not megalomania women to do. It is not megalomania-cal," she says, "to want to be signifi-cant; it is only human." The female reader's "search for perfect love through an incoherent, hostile wilder-ness of days is the plot that endows the aimless [life] with aim. Her quest is to be recognized in all her signifi-cance. When, at the end, this is done, she is transformed: her outer shape reshe is transformed: her outer shape re-flects her inner self."

The fate of the heroine, in literature and in life, has traditionally been marriage. "The hero moves toward a goal; the heroine tries to be it." "The marriage plot most novels depend on," nage plot most novels depend on."
Brownstein observes, "is about finding validation of one's uniqueness and importance by being singled out among all other women by a man."
The idea of becoming a heroine "marries the female protagonist to the marriage plot, and it marries the woman who medical forficion." who reads to fiction."

This arrangement cannot have been entirely satisfactory to women. As the author says, "How very odd it is to choose another so as to choose a self." "Girls," she says, "have rushed right from novels, headlong and hopeful, into what they took to be happy endings." Is it possible, she wonders, to "be who one is while living a generic woman's life?" She goes on to point out that "the idea of becoming a heroine, which can organize the self, can also enclose it. In the interest of order and beauty and even truth, it

Female Identity

The self-examination of the heroine began to lead toward the end of the 19th century to what Henry James called a "revision" of the novel of the heroine, as well as the idea of female identity. In Anthony Trollope's "Can You Forgive Her?" a heroine on the brink of marriage had, in Trollope's words, "gone on thinking of the matter till her mind had become filled with some undefined idea of the importance to her of her own life." As Brownstein puts it, "the issue of marrying has made her life seem too important to be determined by that issue's resolution." In writing of George Eliot's heroines, Virginia Woolf put it more strongly: "The ancient consciousness of women, charged with suffering and sensibility, and for so many ages dumb, seems in them to have brimmed and overflowed and uttered a demand for something — they scarcely know what — for something that is perhaps incompatible with the facts of human existence." facts of human existence."

Rather than blaming women's frustration on human existence, Doris Lessing, in "The Golden Notebook," suggests that the traditional realistic narrative is inadequate to the truth about the lives of modern women. Brownstein puts it well when she says that the novel's prime subject becomes "the play between conscionsness and convention." In Henry James's "Portrait of a Lady." Isabel Archer is represented as "affronting her destiny" in refusing to marry a man she regards as unsuitable.

Recognition counters by securing the Brownstein counters by arguing that she was affronted by her destiny.

Original Romance

Women have come a long way from the original romance of the novel. Jane Austen's novels "revise" themselves by their "ironic embrace of literary conventions." "Scrutinizing the world's available men, women begin to acquire a degree of disillusionment and detachment." As Virginia Woolf saw it, "human character changed in or about December 1910," and as a result, Brownstein says, "Clarissa Dalloway seems both a travesty and a projection of her creator." There is in her "a sense of the self as evanescent, of people slipping away like

According to Brownstein, the female-centered novel has betrayed women even more than men have, women even more than men have. Though they were turned into heroines, they were "governed by constraints as rigid as the ones that make a sonnet." When they broke through these restraints, as Dorothea did in "Middlemarch," they "dwindled out of art into nature," they were released from self-consequence." "released from self-consciousness" and "slipped away from the novel of their life." In Henry James's case, the woman was "destined to be undone by becoming the heroine-victim of her own awareness." And this is where most women in fiction are now, the brilliant Brownstein concludes. Heroines or victims, or both, but of their own awareness, not of men's.

Anatole Broyard is on the staff of The New York Times.

New Cave Found at Carlsbad

The Associated Press CARLSBAD, New Mexico - Three explorers have found a huge new cave in Carlsbad Caverns that is lined with colored crystals and contains "more beauty than you can describe," according to one of the three, Ron Kerbo of the National Park Service. A park official said it was the first major discovery in the caverus since 1966.

CHESS

By Alan Byrne

THE Hungarian grandmaster Lajos Portisch had to put in a lot of hard, sometimes frustrating, effort for his first-place tie with the Filipino grandmaster Eugenio Torre in the Toinca, Mexico, Interzonal Tournament.

Apart from his third-round loss to the Seattle grandmaster Yasser-Seirawan, Portisch's most agonizing encounter was in the 11th round, with Totre. Always on the verge of win-ning, Portisch kept up the pressure through 110 moves spanning II hours and several playing sessions until, nearly exhausted, he had to acknowledge Torre's obstinate defense and agree to a draw. When he got another adjourned end game against the Russian grand-master Yuri Balashov in the 13th round, Portisch was determined not to let it get away from him, too. He made certain of this vital victory by relentlessly precise technique.

The old 5 B-B4 that Portisch chose has become a subtle alternative to 5 B-N5. It put no obstacle in the way of the freeing advance 6 . . . P-B4, the idea being to demonstrate that the black center is fragile. black center is fragile.

After 19 Q-N5, it would have been doubtful to maintain a middle game by 19 . . Q-Q1?! because of 20 B-N1! with follow ups such as 21 Q-Q3 or 21 P-K4. Nevertheless, Balashov was too compliant in exchanging with 19 . . . QxQ?; 20 BxQ. He should have played 19 . . . After 23 R/2-B2, how should Against Portisch's classical play, Balashov's problems became harder Balashov's problems became harder with every move. On 29 K-R2, he could have tried 29 ... R-R8; 30 R-B3, B-Q4, except that 31 N-Q7! would have produced the threat of 32 N-N8. The point of 29 ... R-Q4 was that 30 NxQBP?, R-Q6!; 31 P-QR4, B-N6 recovers the lost pawn, taking Black out of all trouble.

But it foundered against 30 P-B4!, P-B3; 31 RxP! forcing Black into a lost ending. After 31. B-B4; 32 N-B3, there was nothing Balashov could do for his sickly QRP except 32. P-QR4, which let Portisch get the rooks off with 33 R-B5.

On 47 N-B3, the mirage of counterplay with 47 . . . K-B3 would have been dispelled by 48 K-Q4, K-N4; 49 N-K5, K-R5; 50 NzP, KzP; 51 P-B6, B-K3; 52 N-B4, B-B4; 53 P-N6.

After 53 N-B3, Balashov surely epvisioned such a finish as 53. . B-Q8; 54 N-Q4, K-Q2; 55 K-N5, B-N6; 56 P-B6ch, K-Q3; 57 K-N6, B-Q8; 58 N-B5ch!, PxN; 59 P-B7 forcing a queen. Accordingly, he gave up.

Brewers Beat Orioles for Flag; Braves Win Pennant as Dodgers Lose By Angus Phillips der of his cont and and an angular statement and an angular s descentioned by the base

Finally, the Baltimore lucky streak to happen to get you back to playing the game to win.

"There wasn't a man out there that can say he wasn't afraid. If they did, they're a liar."

The Brewers were afraid because day — they were on the verge of losing five straight games and blowing a seemingly safe four-game lead and the American League Eastern Division title they'd never won. But something good happened the first time they came to bat as Robin Yount, a strong most-valuable player candidate, sliced a home run into the right field seats off Jim Palmer.

With that, the real Brewers finally stood up and rambled to a 10-2 drubbing of the Baltimore Orioles. Yount hit another homer, to left

When it was over, the men from the beer city drowned themselves in champagne, as ballplayers are expected to do, and led themselves in a tipsy rendition of the familiar "O-R-I-O-L-E-S" cheer with which they'd been taunted for three days.

"Every break went their way." Sunday the breaks went the other way, including another ceron Sunday — the season's final tain double to left by Ripken that went foul by the same slim margin. The Brewers tacked on to their

That catch was so spectacular that Oglivie hurried into the clubhouse after the eighth inning to watch it on television replay.

Manager Harvey Kuenn was the chief back-patter and positive-thinker on this club, and he, like Thomas, insisted he had "never a doubt we'd win it."

His players say it was Kuenn that turned them around this season from an under-500 club to the team with the best record in baseball. Since he took over from Buck Rogers June 2 they are 72-43.

Kuenn's game philosophy has been, "Relax, hit the ball out of the park and have fun," said mas, and that was the message he kept delivering to his players in a final troubled week.

It finally sank in Sunday. But don't let a Brewer tell you it was a confident team that took the field. Sure, everybody was reassuring loose and relaxed," said Simmons. "When they have to say it, that led by Our Staff From Dispatches BRISBANE, Australia -- Canadian Alex Baumann, swimming despite a slightly dislocated shoulder, set a world record in the 200-meter individual medley Monday at the Commonwealth Games.

Baumann Sets 200-Medley Record

SAN DIEGO — Atlanta could have clinched its first championship since 1969 by beating San Diego here Sunday. The Braves lost, 5-1 — but they received an assist from the San Francisco Giants, who defeated Los Angeles, 5-3 and won the National League's Western Division championship any-

The only person in the Atlanta locker room who managed to avoid being doused with champagne was slugger Dale Murphy. He is almost as celebrated for his clean living as Steve Garvey, and is also a good bet to wind up as the league's most valuable player. Please don't tell anybody about my dry hair." he said.

"What a crazy way to end a crazy year!" Murphy exclaimed.
"We go from eight games ahead to four back, come out here having to win five games on the West Coast, then wind up watching TV for 30 minutes to see what happens

The Braves, with a one-game lead going into Sunday's play, actually backed into the championship. After their loss (Alan Wig-gins' three-run triple triggered a five-run fifth that put the game away for the Padres), they watched a telecast of the climax of the Dodger-Giant game in San Francisco. The moment it ended, the champagne shower erupted.

The afternoon had particular import for Phil Niekro, the 43-yearold knuckieballer who was a member of the last Atlanta Braves team to win a division title. "This is my most enjoyable moment in base-ball," said Niekro, who had a 17-4 record this year as the team's Several players said they wanted to win for Niekro, but the oldtimer was baving none of that.

"We wanted to win this thing for our fans all over the country," Niekro said. "I hope they enjoy it as much as we do."

"We had what it takes in September. We certainly didn't choke," Niekto said. "I've waited a long time, but all this is worth the The Braves may not have had as hit a three-run home run that carried the Giants to their triumph over Los Angeles. In seventh in-ning, the Dodgers blew a none-out, bases-loaded situation — during which a pinch hitter had batted unsuccessfuly for pitcher Fernando Valenzuela — and in their half of the inning the Giants rallied against relievers Tom Niedenfuer and Terry Forster. The Giants had been held to two hits to that point, but Bob Brealy and Champ Summers singled off Niedenfuer, who struck out Greg Minton before giving way to Forster. Forster farmed ich hitter Jim Wohlford, but Morgan drilled a 1-2 pitch over the right-field fence to scuttle the Dodgers' pennant hopes.

Expos 6, Pirates 1 In Pittsburgh, Tim Wallach hit a three-run homer and Steve Rogers pitched a five-hitter to help Montreal defeat the Pirates, 6-1. At the conclusion of the game, the Expos announced that Jim Fanning would not return as manager next season but would return to his old iob in the front office as vice president for player development and scouting. Expo first baseman Al Oliver clinched the league batting title with a .331 average and Rogers (19-8) won carned-run honors with a 2.40 mark.

Phillies 4, Mets 1

In Philadelphia, Mike Schmidt hit his 35th home run of the season and Steve Carlton allowed just four hits to pick up his 23d victory in leading the Phillies to a 4-1 victory over New York. Carlton, making his third start of the week, struck out 13 and finished with 286 for the season to lead the league. He also topped the league in complete games (19), innings pitched (295%) and shutouts (6).

Astros 3. Reds 0

In Houston, Joe Niekro pitched a three-hitter and Dickie Thon scored twice in leading the Astros to a 3-0 victory over Cincinnati. Niekro finished at 17-12 and, with his fifth shutout of the season, lowcred his ERA to 2.47, second-best in the league.

Cardinals 5, Cubs 4 In Chicago, Julio Gonzalez led off the 14th with his first homer of the year, lifting St. Louis to a 5-4 victory over Chicago. Gonzalez, who had four hits, put a 1-1 pitch from Ken Kravec (1-1) into the left-field bleachers to end a fourgame Cardinal losing streak.

who return from severe injuries. The defense has hard-hitting Barry Beck, offensive threat Reijo Ruotsalainen and steady Tom Laidlaw. The eight-year-old Washington Capitals will end their string of never having made the playoffs thanks to a trade with Montreal that brought all-star defensemen Rod Langway and Brian Engblom. Another deal secured goalie Pat

Riggin and, along with an offense apurred by Dennis Maruk (60 goals), Mike Gartner, Bobby Carpenter and Chris Valentine, the Caps look good for third. Taking the Islanders to the limit in the opening playoff round last spring has done wonders for Pittsburgh's confidence. The Penguins have one of the top NHL goalies

How the mighty have fallen. In the spring of 1980, the Philadelphia Flyers were in the cup finals. This season, they'll struggle to make the playoffs because of a weak defense and uncertain goaltending.

The front line is still first-rate, with Bill Barber (45-44/89), Ron Flockhart (72 points), Brian Propp (44-47/91) and the inspirational Bobby Clarke, Mark Howe has been added to the defense, but he doesn't figure to cure the team's woes there. And neither Rick St. Croix nor Pelle Lindbergh have shown enough in goal to keep the Flyers near the top of the division.

New Jersey: Forget it. The transplanted Colorado Rockies, minus their best skater, Rob Ramage (he was dealt to St. Louis), have only goalie Glenn Resch and the new Byrne Meadowlands Arena to brag

An influx of youth, balanced with some worthy veterans, helped Boston improve last season. This year, with still more youth and a year of NHL action under the belts of the 1981-82 kids, the Bruins should be ready to supplant Montreal atop this sector. Ray Bourque might be the best powerhouse. And yes, the Canadiens are rebuilding. Still, they will be formidable, especially if Guy Lafleur and Larry Robinson return to all-star form. The defense will miss Engblom and Langway, but Rick Green came along with forward Ryan Walter in the trade with Washington and Green may reach his promise in Montreal.

Keith Acton (36-52/88) is a speedy, high-scoring center in the Montreal tradition. Steve Shutt returns from the injured list and Mark Napier (31 goals), Mario Tremblay (33) and Pierre Mondou

(35) all are dangerous. With two-way players like Bob Gainey and Walter, the Canadiens once again will have a fine defensive record. Youngsters Richard Sevigny and Rick Wamsley will share the net.

If Daniel Bouchard continues to sparkle in goal and with the maturation of a young defense, especially playoff stars Dave Pichette and Normand Rochefort, matures, watch out for Quebec. The Nordiques can skate and score with anyone, thanks to the Stasnys — center Peter (46-93/139), left wing Anton (26 goals) and right wing Marian (35 goals) — and Michel Goulet (42-42/84) and Real Cloutier (37 goals). Phil Housley. Some strange trades over two seasons have left Blaine Stoughton (52-39/91) as the only link to Hartford's World Hockey Association days. Pierre Larouche (34-37/71) is a solid scorer and Ron Francis (68 points in 59 games) showed plenty as a rookie. Life on Takeover Lane

WASHINGTON — It isn't easy to explain what happened in the bloody takeover battle involving four giant conglom-crates, Bendix, Martin Marietta, United Technologies and Allied.

One fine day some months back, Charlie Bendix, flush with cash, was taking a stroll down Takeover Lane, when he stopped in front of Marty Marietta's house.

"Nice home you got there," Charlie said to Marty, who was out mowing his lawn. "How much you Marty said, "Buzz off, Charlie. My house is not for sale." "I happen to know your relatives would sell it in a minute if the price was right. If you won't turn it over to me in a friendly manner, I'll make them an offer they can't

"Oh yeah, wise guy?" Marty said. "If you try to buy my house, I'll buy your house. How do you like that

Charlie laughed at him because he knew Marty didn't have the money to buy the Bendix house.

The next day Charlie ran an ad in the newspaper saying he would pay twice as much for Marty's house as it was worth.

Marty ran an ad the following morning saying he would buy out anyone who had an interest in Charlie's house.

The price on both houses went soaring, and Charlie and Marty had to go to the banks to borrow large sums of money to try to purchase each other's homes.

Charlie had done a lot of homework, and he knew in a real estate war he could outlast Marty.

Abel Gance 'Napoleon' Is Sold Out in Tokyo

The Associated Press TOKYO — Japanese movie fans, spending up to $44 a seat, have bought all 7,000 tickets for screenings of Abel Gance's classic silent film "Napoleon," a spokesman for the promoter said Monday. Ticket prices ranged from 5,000 yen ($18) to 12,000 yen, the spokesman said. The four-hour film, scheduled for showings Oct. 16 and 17, was reconstructed by the British direc-tor-writer Kevin Brownlow from long-lost fragments of the longer original made in 1927. The promoter's spokesman, Yasuo Akagi, said more than 200 people were on a waiting list for ticket cancellations for the Tokyo showings.

His information was correct, up to a point.

Marty had a pal named Hugh Nighted, who loved to dabble in real estate and anything else that caught his eye. Marty went to Hugh and said, "Charlie Bendix is trying to buy my house and to defend myself I'm trying to buy his house. Right now he's got me against the wall because I don't have enough money to swing my end of the deal."

"Tell you what I'll do," Hugh said. "I'll buy Charlie's house with you. All I want is the kitchen, one bathroom and the living room. You can have the basement and the upper floor. We'll split the dining room between us."

Marty was relieved because with Hugh's backing he now had a chance to save his own house.

When it was announced that Hugh Nighted was behind Marty, Charlie Bendix should have backed out of the deal. But Charlie was a proud man and he didn't want everyone in the neighborhood saying he didn't know how to buy another guy's house. So Char-lie upped the ante again for Mar-ty's place, and before long both Marty's and Charlie's homes had the most inflated real estate prices ever seen on Takeover Lane,

For a while it looked as if Charte would wind up owning Marty's bouse and Marty would wind up owning Charlie's house at 10 times what each had paid for them.

At this point, an acquaintance of Charlie's, named Al Eyed, came to Bendix and said, "I want to buy your house."

your nouse."
"So does Marty Marietta and Hugh Nighted," Charley said.
"The only difference." Al said, "is that, if I buy it, I'll let you live in it for a while. If those guys buy it they'll kick your tail out in the gutter."

gutter Charlie Bendix was in tears. "All I tried to do was buy Marty's house, and now I have to sell mine.

"It's dog eat dog on Takeover Lane. If it will make you feel any better, Marry almost went broke trying to stop you from buying his home. He'll be in debt for 10 years. Well, do you and I have a deal?" "What choice do I have?"

"None. So just sign here. By the way, what are you going to tell your wife?" Al asked.
"I don't have to tell her any-thing," Charlie replied. "It was her idea in the first place."

Jeanne Moreau

'Less Egocentric' at 54, She Is Living

'My Autobiography'

By Glenn Collins

New York Times Service
NEW YORK —"I feel," said
Jeanne Money "" V Jeanne Moreau, "that I have a little more knowledge about myself now." She was screnely working her way through lunch and a box of filter cigarettes in an East Side restaurant. The privilege of my age — I am 54 — is that I have more confidence and yet I'm calmer. I know more about myself and yet — how shall I say it — I feel, yes, less egocentric."

It is a sweet season in the life of Jeanne Moreau, and perhaps a time for Moreau-watchers to rediscover the woman whose dark eyes first seduced filmgoers in such classics as "Les Lizisons Dangereuses," "Jules and Jim" and "La Notte."

There are two Jeanne Moreaus: There is the persevering filmmaker who is furthering her transition to director. And then there is the Jeanne Moreau whose career as an actress began in the Comédie Française and who achieved the stature of an international presence.
In Joseph Losey's new film,

"La Truite" (The Trout), showing in Europe and at the New York Film Festival, Moreau plays the wife of a man in the thrall of an irrepressible country girl. Also at the New York festival is "L'Adolescente," the 1979 film in which Morean directed Simone Signoret to considerable acclaim. Moreau also appears in the late Rainer Werner Fassbinder's last film, "Querelle," now in Europe-

"In 'L'Adolescente,' you are seeing much more of what I am than when I act," she said when asked how one might best know the real Jeanne Moreau. She did not act in "L'Adolescente," unlike the first film she directed, "Lumière." She conceived the theme of "L'Adolescente" and helped write the screenplay. "The film expresses my choices in life. I have seen terrible things, I know about brutality and misery, but it is also a film about gentle-

an release

ness and passion." This is a time of equilibrium, of new stability in her life, Moreau said, a time when she is plotting patiently to direct new of growth that could not be re-films while extending her repertory as an actress who still finds herself very much in demand.

"It was lovely to work with him again," she said of Losey, who directed her in the 1965 film "Eva" and in "Monsieur Klein" in 1976. "We have a real complicity by now, we've known each other for so long. But it is true that it is just as exciting to work with someone new."

with someone new."

She had that privilege with Fassbinder in Berlin during the making of "Querelle." "No, he did not look healthy," she said grimly of the director's physical condition. Then, brightening, she said, "But he was perfect, absolutely perfect in terms of creativilutely perfect in terms of creativity. His intensity was incredible. "It was our first film and yet we had a very intimate feeling about working together, a feeling I can't express in words. The only time I ever asked what he wanted of me in a scene, he said, 'Be excellent.' 'She shrugged. "I thought that was fair enough."

Directing has not complicated her task as an actress, she said: There is no problem whatsoever. I always give myself totally to a director." She paused and then, smiling at an alternate meaning to her words, said: "There was no true close relationship, except with Malle" — Louis Malle, who directed her in four films. Her other directors have included Michelangelo Antonioni, François Truffant, Marcel Ophuls, Orson Welles, Luis Buñuel, Jean Renoir and Philippe de Broca.

"But it is not difficult to be close to any director," she contin-ued. "When you start filming you're in a dangerous zone — for the actress, for the director, for everyone. It's like being on a raft in the middle of the ocean. You feel that the person in charge has tremendous power, and can order many things that would not be possible on dry land."

Welles encouraged her to direct in 1972. "I received no other encouragement," she said with some vehemence. "He was the only one. Although Truffaut did send me a nice letter after he saw 'Lumière.' " That was in 1976. "It was not an ego trip, becoming a director." It was part of a process said: When it becomes painful for you not to be a director — then you do it.' And so, I did."

She said she had not experienced discrimination against her as a woman in becoming a direc-tor. The real problem for me was not any outer struggle but an inner one. The problem was to convince myself that I had the ability to direct a movie. I had to fight against all the things I was taught as a child: I am a woman, a woman does not do these things, they are not my business."

"L'Adolescente" is not strictly autobiographical, Moreau said, but one aspect of the film was very much part of her life. The character of the young doctor is based on Dr. Gregory Elliachevitch, who saw Morean through her operation for uterine cancer in 1962. "He is the one who saved me, and this is my tribute to him." She paused thoughtfully. "When people ask me whether this role or that role was a challenge, this is so ridiculous. Challenge was important once in my life, when I was told that I had cancer and I was not going to live. That was challenge."

She finds many parallels be-tween "L'Adolescente" and "Lu-mière," her widely praised 1975 film, the men are outsiders. "This is because I have not taken my own personal knowledge of men and used it in the film. I could not presume to portray them as I see them with total freedom. Yet, of course, male directors feel no such restraint; they have made the assumption that they know what the world of women is like."

She said she hopes to portray the world of men in the next film she will direct, "Belukia," based on a novel by Pierre Drieu La Rochelle that she described as "a fable out of time." She plans to begin shooting in April.

For a time, Moreau said, during her marriage to the director William Friedkin, which broke up in 1980, she worked on an autobiography. "I wrote 600 pages, and maybe 300 of those are good. I got only as far as the age of 15. And then I left off writing it. I thought, I have things to do. I'm living my autobiography.' I'll re-

Bonisolli Booed at Linz

Austrian audience at the final per-formance of the Bruckner Festival the land of Israel. It was in his in Linz. A reviewer said the audience of 1,460 was disappointed by Bonisolli's singing as Arnoldo in a concert version of Rossini's "Guillaume Tell." Bonisolli was reportedly almost inaudible through the first two acts. After the second act, he asked the audience for indulgence because of a "sudden in-disposition." This drew boos and provoked a heated exchange be-tween the singer and some listeners in which he blamed his problem on the air conditioning. Bonisolli was also the center of a controversy in 1978 at the Vienna Staatsoper in the role of Manrico in Verdi's "Il Trovatore": During a public dress rehearsal for an internationally televised performance, the tenor quit the stage after persistent booing and returned only for the finale. The television performance had to be rescheduled. A spokesman for the opera admitted then that Bonisolli had not sung to the best of his ability "because it was only a re-hearsal." Bonisolli returned to the role but was replaced five days lat-er by Placido Domingo. * * *

The conductor Riccardo Muni, 41, may succeed Sir Colin Davis as musical director of the Royal Op-era, Covent Garden, The Times of London reports. Davis recently signed a two-year contract extend-ing his directorship through 1986. He has been in charge of Covent Garden since 1971, when he succeeded Sir Georg Solti. Muti is conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra and recently resigned as chief conductor of the Philharmonia Orchestra of London. A Royal Opera spokesman confirmed that negotiations were under way and said of Muti: "It would be a great thing if we could get him."

Ruth Dayan, 65, who until 1971 was married to the late Israeli soldier-statesman Moshe Dayan, says that her former husband could be "beastly" toward her and others but that she forgave him everything. In an interview with the Tel Aviv daily Ma'ariv, which published some of Dayan's early love letters to her, Mrs. Dayan said her husband's devotion to Israel made up for his bad relations with peo-ple. "He was totally beastly to me," she said. "I made a mistake. I should have left him long before I

The Italian tenor Franco Bonisol-li drew boos of protest from an a hard man, nasty in human relasoul, His blood. And I forgave him for everything. For the terrible insult. For the betrayals, for destroying our family." They were di-vorced after 33 years of marriage; he remartied two years later, Mrs. Davan, who did not remarry, runs a Tel Aviv gift shop and has worked for better relations between Israeli Jews and Araba Dayan died of a heart attack last October at age 66 after a long battle with cancer. In May, his cidest son, Ehnd, published a blistering attack on Dayan, calling him a greedy, lecherous man who cared only for his personal glory and nothing for his family.

> The composer-arranger Waiter Scharf is trying to persuade the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, to return some music he donated to the Smithsonian about 40 years ago. One piece is his original orchestration of "God Bless America" for Kate Smith to sing in the Hollywood Bowl. The other is the orchestration for "White Christmas" that Bing Crosby sang in the movie "Holiday Inn." Scharf wants the music back so he can add it to the permanent collec-tion of his memorabilia at the University of Wyoming at Laramie.

The jazz pianist and singer Bob-by Short played to sell-out crowds throughout his three-week engage-ment in samba-mad Saō Paulo. Roberto Maksoud hired Short for the Club 150 in the Maksoud Plaza Hotel, even though he was unsure whether the 58-year-old musician, who specializes in Cole Porter songs, would go over in Brazil. But the club, which has a capacity of 240, was virtually sold out during the whole booking. Maksoud said he planned to sign Short to play in Sao Paulo every fall. Short spends his winters playing at the Carlyle Hotel in New York.
